FEBVRE WINES

From the Romans who spread the growth of wine throughout much of Western Europe, to Napoleon who ensured his troops were fully supplied with food and wine during battles and on to the British Navy, whose Quartermasters viewed the supply of 'Grog' and gunpowder with equal importance... It is clear that alcohol, and more specifically wine, has been inextricably linked to conflict and Military history in the most interesting ways.

Noel McMahon from Febvre Wines will take us through an entertaining and informative lecture on the pervasive influence of wine in military and political environments and how it has influenced military strategy, created alliances and the tearing apart of countries. It promises to be an educational and enjoyable evening!
